A woman found with a bag of cash and £800 of JD Sports vouchers is believed to have been smuggling suspected drug money. Liverpool woman Danielle Shields flew in to Jersey on February 7 this year when she was stopped by customs officers. The 43-year-old, who had £20 and her bank card, told officers she was staying at the luxurious Royal Yacht hotel. But the following day, travelling outbound to Liverpool, Shields was stopped again, with officers this time finding a huge haul of cash in her baggage. As well as £2,336 in cash, she also had JD Sports gift vouchers to the value of £800, receipts for clothing and a Jersey Post receipt for an outbound package. She also admitted to internally concealing a further £1,360 and was also found wearing a new Tag Heuer watch. Officers later retrieved the outbound package that Shields had the receipt for, which was found to contain an empty Tag Heuer box and a receipt for £2,100. During her police interview, she admitted to attempting to export the cash that she suspected to be the proceeds of crime, possibly from the sale of drugs.
